I woke up at 4am again. My body was still curled up tightly into a ball, hugging itself and sealing all the edges of the duvet against my skin. Only my exposed head didn't feel the warmth and softness as my weight was enveloped by the foam mattress. My body was anchored but my mind was racing through a kaleidoscope of images that continually dissolved and reappeared, the same but made anew. I thought my eyes were open as I could make out the familiar contours of my room, but in fact they were still closed. I was simultaneously rooted and drifting through fragmented scenes, at times bleached or saturated by lens flare, entirely destabilising my location in space and time.

A friend of mine, who had been told by their sister, told me that this time of night is called the witching hour, where demons and ghosts appear and are at their most powerful. But apparently it's just high cortisol levels in our bodies. A morning anxiety that reflects fear and panic about our lives and our world back to us in figurative supernatural form.

Eventually the dizziness led to a sustained tingling sensation in my fingers and legs. At this stage, I knew the game was up and I was fully awake with hours to go until normal service resumed. At this stage NHS England suggests breathing exercises or listening to free wellbeing audio guides. I reached across and fumbled in the dark for my phone. I held it at arm's length to avoid the full glare of the screen but with my thumb just able to swipe across. My head was cocked at a horizontal angle such that my eyes kept moving in and out of focus, my breath shortened, and I began inhaling content.

"Chaotic END" "Something HAS to give" "We have to be a UNIT, that's what we stand for!" "I NEED your help" "I want my country BACK" "I was just a number until I became a STORY" "Zimbabweans rise against corruption" "ZIONIST Got Put In His Place" "Should I Stay Or Should I Go" "Don't Skip ME" "Murdering Nazi U.K Media" "Facts Vs Myths" "Patriot EXPOSED" "Dad hopes to buy us food whenever someone shares this video but no one has" "We LOVE Black People" "I will not forgive ANYONE" "Confused Caller Gets COMPLETELY Destroyed" "NOBODY Is Buying Her Excuse" "HARSH Roasts That Shatter Egos" "No donations since yesterday" "Can Britain Ever Be SAFE" "One battle After Another" "We Want FREEDOM" "This Got Heated" "This HAS to end" "It's WORSE than you think" "Turn DAY into NIGHT" "World Hold On" "It Doesn't Matter Whether It's True Now" "Please Give. I need $400 by Friday"¹

Here, in East London

Here, in East London

0:55 (upbeat music)
 1:02 Hello everyone, my name is Blair or the Illuminati and welcome back to the channel. Today we are going to be deep diving
 1:08 into another organization that believes in doing good, but has actually caused some serious harm
 1:15 that's been swept under the rug. Some of it you may have heard about but other deeply diserving activities, perhaps not.
 1:21 We're talking about the Salvation Army. Many of you know them from around the holidays, the men and women standing outside the grocery stores
 1:27 with a bell and a little red bucket. You may be feeling in the giving mood because it's the holiday season.
 1:33 Drop your coins in or a few dollar bills after all, they're a charity that helps the poor, right?
 1:38 Their slogan propped up on the sign beside these bell ringers says, "Doing the most good",
 1:43 But how true is that? How much good are they actually doing and how much damage all with your dollars?
 1:49 Let's dive right in and find out. - Welcome to Bible study. We're all children of Jesus.

32:14 This past Christmas bell ringers handed out cards
 32:20 explaining the charities approach to the LGBTQ community, including testimonials from LGBTQ members
 32:26 and frequently asked questions. "For years, Facebook posts, forwarded emails
 32:31 and rumors have been leading some people to believe the Salvation Army does not serve members of the LGBTQ community," the cards read.
 32:39 "These accusations are simply not true." If these cards had an apology and explanation
 32:45 and a resolve to do better, I might be on board with this. If the cards read something like, "Hey, we forgot what we're really about.
 32:51 Helping people and not judging them. Our Christian values say how important it is to give back and be there for others
 32:58 and we're sorry we weren't there for you." A real apology not based on money. A donation to an LGBTQ center
 33:04 or an alliance with one to show real progress. Those kinds of acts make a difference. Not cards that say, "Those accusations aren't true."

33:12 Denying the crystal clear proof that they've been discriminatory all along. I think Ross Murray,
 33:18 a director of education and training at GLAAD, the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation says it best
 33:25 when he said the following, "The Salvation Army has been advertising that it will help LGBTQ people in need,
 33:32 which is a good step, but it can't be the only step. They're anti LGBTQ history was multifaceted 33:38 and its path to LGBTQ acceptance is also going to have to be multifaceted.
 33:44 And all that said, that's where I think I'm going to end today's video. I do truly want the Salvation Army
 33:50 to do better considering they're a huge organization, but I'm pretty darn skeptical after researching this.
 33:56 It seems pretty clear to me that they aren't supporting the LGBTQ community because they care about helping everyone.
 34:02 But so they just don't lose money and get called out for it anymore. If you still believe the Salvation Army
 34:08 has enough fantastic causes to earn your hard earned donations despite the shady behavior in the White House,
 34:14 the insulting financial offers to silence victims of horrible unmentionable abuse
 34:19 and the long history of discrimination well, then nothing more I can say is really gonna change your mind.
 34:26 But before I start supporting a charity that says they're dedicated to doing the most good, I want to make sure that 34:32 they're not only doing the most good, but doing no harm to my community. And that said, thank you so much for watching today's video.
 34:38 Let me know your thoughts in the comment section down below. And if you're new here, don't forget to subscribe
 34:44 and make sure to like the video."

“Long before the advent of reality television, the popular game show Queen for a Day thrilled American audiences by giving women who told heartbreaking tales of financial struggles a chance at winning expensive items that could help solve their problems”

“Eventually, a clap-o-meter would appear, superimposed over each woman’s face. The winner would be chosen based on the volume of the audience’s applause.”

“Today, something like that black-and-white TV show plays out nonstop, but on different devices. It’s the plot of GoFundMe, the world’s largest crowdfunding website for personal causes.”

“The privately owned company says it helped people raise over US\$30 billion in donations between 2010 and early 2024”

“Behind GoFundMe’s winners, whose stories are paraded on the site’s front page and its podcast – True Stories of Good People – stands a long line of also-rans.”

“Crowdfunding works best when there’s a crowd willing and able to help, which usually begins with family, friends and acquaintances. But if your family and friends are broke, like you, then there’s little help to be had, no matter how good your campaign is or how deftly you promote it”

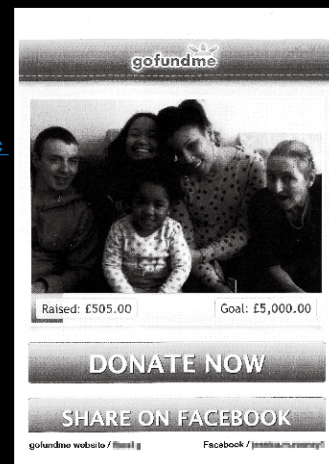

“We estimate that only about 17 percent of U.S. GoFundMe campaigns for health care and emergency costs meet their goal”

“Failure doesn’t sell”

“The droves of campaigns that never get off the ground are largely hidden by an algorithmic recommendation system that promotes the most successful cases to prominence while sweeping the rest into the platform’s search results”

“One user we interviewed, whose campaign for help with medical costs ended up not receiving a single donation, likened the experience to ‘shouting into that well of sadness, hoping people will see and hear you’”

“This appears to be highly profitable for GoFundMe, which earns revenue from fees and tips added to donations but leaves many users feeling disappointed and some even duped.”¹ _____ has always strenuously denied that his musical humanitarian projects to relieve famine in Ethiopia were instrumental in aiding and abetting the Mengistu regime's starvation and slaughter of millions of people. Last year, marking its 40th anniversary, _____'s denials of, amongst other charges, 'white saviourism' took the form of blaming post-structuralist French philosophers Jacques Derrida and Michel Foucault.¹ But over the years _____ has offered a variety of forms of denial that are now routinely appropriated by other celebrity humanitarians.

2 Literal denial – _____ *was fraudulently impersonated in spending hundreds of thousands of pounds donated to Fashion for Relief on luxury hotels, flights, spa treatments, personal security and cigarettes.*³ Interpretative denial – _____'s *family did not gain any personal benefit from donations honouring Covid hero Captain Tom and all activities, including building a home spa, were only ever in support of the charity's legacy.*⁴ Implicatory denial – _____ *accepts that some people feel her image holding a Ugandan child represents a tired narrative, but rejects any accusations of a 'sinister motive' and highlights that the child's grandad has a working relationship with Comic Relief.*⁵

The most important development of Live Aid 2 was the fact that not one single celebrity humanitarian had to step foot in Africa. By this point most celebrities had either vacated the continent entirely or had comprehensively framed their projects as cutting-edge human rights work using satellite technology – what _____ calls "anti-genocide paparazzi".⁶ More pertinent however was the rise of AI technology in the production of global development and health images. With the closure of entire aid budgets leading to hundreds of millions of the most vulnerable people losing access to vital healthcare and education, packing celebrities on expensive flights to interview actual people seemed frivolous to say the least. Furthermore, some professionals even espoused the ethical potentials for safeguarding the privacy and dignity of survivors and victims, who were no longer needed to tell their story.

Instead, you simply contract design studios and marketing agencies to imagine, write and instruct OpenAI or Nano Banana Pro to visualise whatever pain, horror and salvation is most befitting your specific charitable purpose and audience. Even the UN staged AI generated re-enactments, including a Burundian woman describing being raped by three men and left to die in 1993 during the country's civil war.⁷ *"Emaciated presumed African child holds an empty bowl outstretched before him, casting a plaintive and appealing gaze towards the camera, against a backdrop of parched earth."*⁸ *Brown presumed Muslim child with a loose-fitting head scarf and dark purple bruising surrounding one eye, stares into the camera with a look of sadness and defiance.*⁹ *Caucasian White presumed Volunteer male looks down upon young black children with concern, against a backdrop of a blurry presumed African village.*¹⁰

_____ sat uncomfortably in the interview seat. His knees were clasped together and made small involuntary bouncing movements. People continued to ask him 'would you do it again?' His head bowed down slightly as he ran his hand up through the thinning long greys that still got into his eyes occasionally. People continued to say 'there's more need now than ever'. Maybe this was the moment to reflect with honesty and sincerity, to move past disavowal and publicly acknowledge what we all know, and have been aware of knowing, for quite some time.

*"We are enmeshed in the very problem that we are trying to solve. We are part of it... Can something that is a direct function, a direct product of the system that it's trying to change, be a useful agent of change within that system? Can you be the thing while trying to change the thing simultaneously?"*¹¹

Solidarity is our weapon

“The term mutual aid did get very co-opted through the pandemic. It went from having quite radical, revolutionary roots, from having communist, anarchist roots, to becoming something which you were hearing police officers saying. You were hearing your local councillor was running a mutual aid group. You were hearing that charities were getting involved, and that cannot be mutual aid.”

“The state cannot do mutual aid, the charities cannot do mutual aid. Mutual aid is within the community. But because the term had become so co-opted and used as a way for the state and the charity complex to no longer have to fulfil the roles that they should be fulfilling, because they could just slap mutual aid on it and make everybody do it for free instead, it started to impact the way that people were seeing our group.”

“We ended up having so, so many people come to us. Some of those were coming to us in ways which we were not comfortable with as well, which meant that we had to really look at what our group was providing and how people externally were seeing that. We were receiving referrals where people were going to access state support, which they are eligible for, and they were being told, no, go to a Facebook group instead and ask for support from those people, which is highly inappropriate.”

“Once a term no longer fully encompasses what you are actually trying to do, we have to stop and we have to assess. We have to do a kind of personal audit and think, okay, where can we change so that people are no longer going to make these assumptions?”

Solidarity is our weapon

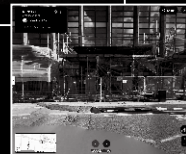

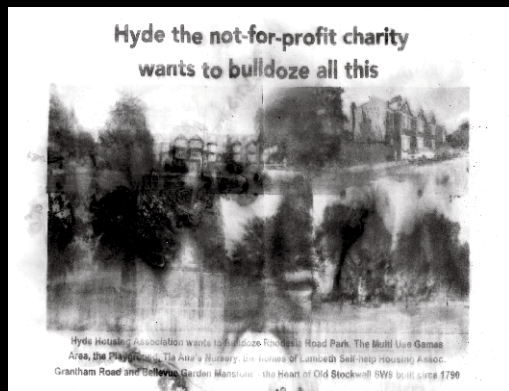

“But also when people are joining us, they know what we’re about from the beginning. We’re not having to try to now redefine what mutual aid is and how mutual aid is now seen in the modern world.”

“Moving past this idea that finances, financial support has to be so heavily guarded, has to be so heavily on lock, is essential for charities. Because really, charities should be saying, we’ve got this amount in the pot, let’s just give it to the people who need it. They should be doing that rather than saying, I need you to shuck and jive, I need you to jump through hoops, I need you to put on a circus act to be able to get a little £500 to run a project for a week. In doing that they’re reinforcing what the state wants us to think about financial support: that it has to be earned or it can only be given if people are somehow seen as worthy of that support or somehow seen as able to manage that.”¹

I agree that the people at the top are definitely the ring leaders, but when the workers go to to some of the extreme lengths they go to you can't exactly say that they don't share blame. I don't dispute that they maybe advised to do those things but, common sense should really kick in when they're aggressively hounding people for donations

She wants to be an astronaut. Can you help? X

She wants to be an astronaut. Can you help?

The Review began. Child X sat fidgeting, engulfed by her chair and surrounded by various Adults around the table. What had become a safe and comforting environment became awkward again in the atmosphere of evaluations and judgements. The most senior Adult, who spoke in a quiet and tender voice, told Child X that from his perspective they seemed to be fitting in very well to their new home. A tall, largely set white man – he might have been an intimidating presence if it wasn't for his head of slightly unkempt curly hair and paternal smile – said X looked happy and was doing very well at school, more than anyone could have expected. They should be very proud of how far they have progressed given all that has happened. They were clearly very talented and developing into a well-adjusted young person. The sky is the limit for you, isn't it?

Command engine start 21. An intense orange flame billows and engulfs the base of the vessel as it begins to judder free from the ground. T+00:10. The camera pans outwards revealing a flat, barren landscape, where a strangely attractive shrub of green vegetation dwarfs the historic action unfolding. T+01:17. Maximum dynamic pressure. As the vessel recedes into a small lumpy dot on a grey expanse, the selected witnesses crane their necks out from the corrugated pen, pom poms clenched and fists raised, hands held over hearts. "We all were up at 5:30 a.m. to see the six women— [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted] and [redacted]. When I got my first glimpse of the [redacted] rocket ship, I gasped. Whoa. That thing is big, and it really is a rocket ship, and my best friend is on it, strapped into seat number five. The magnitude of the moment came into sharp focus."¹

A bundle of papers and a disposable blue biro pen were placed in front of Child X, in exactly the same manner as all the Adults. The ink on the papers was slightly faded and streaked, the end of a long run of photocopies servicing the endless reviews that the Adults have to conduct with increasingly scarce time and resources. The most Senior Adult remarked that, contrary to most, this Review was a ray of light shining through the black hole in the care and criminal justice systems. A smile peeked through his otherwise weary face.

She wants to be an astronaut. Can you help?

It's not often that we can just focus on the positives is it? So tell us, what do you see for your future then?

Some fans showed their support for [redacted] by clubbing together to pay for a digital billboard message in New York's Times Square for 24 hours.² Where were you for the First Human Flight? Others had started talking about it weeks before: Should she, or should she not? To look back down at us with this profound overview. How would this change her perspective on life, on home, on all our futures? Speaking from the viewing platform, [redacted] said: "I didn't realise how emotional it would be, it's hard to explain. Whatever you dream of is in our reach, especially in today's day and age. Dream big, wish for the stars—and one day, you could maybe be amongst them."³

Child X had been making quite an elaborate sketch on page 7 in the space below question H. Changes in the child/young person's concept of identity. The round egg-shaped figure of Dr Robotnik wildly sprays Mean Beans from his long pincer Annihilator arm cannons. The Mean Beans pierce through the blank spaces of the Review form. Some misfiring and others close in on our imperilled shero. The jagged figure of Sonic is meticulously coloured in with the biro, forming a tight blue uniform and her shock of blue hair blows stylishly in the static of the page. The figures are in suspended animation, with Robotnik propped up by the bottom of the page, and Sonic peering downwards, caught between an upward escape from the Mean Beans and a rapid descent between questions F. Changes in the child/young person needs to make life better and G. Changes in the child/young person's aspirations for the future. The most Senior Adult scribbles down in his notes. "[redacted] knows her identity."⁴

Please contact us for all your recycled clothing banks enquiries. We will try and respond as soon as possible. 020 3903 9933 Call us today!

A: Hello there, my name is Ali, I'm just calling to enquire about the recycled clothing banks. I just wanted a bit more information about how it works—

T: Right, what did you say your name was?

A: Ali

T: And what is it you actually want?

A: Well at this stage I'm just enquiring about the bins really. I mean, basically to try and explain, we are doing this art exhibition and, sort of, part of it is about waste economies and recycling and it's in this gallery in East London, quite a big gallery actually and, I guess, we sort of wanted to construct this installation, or reconstruct these—

T: Sorry Ali, I'm on the motorway at the moment so I can't really hear you that well. I'm quite busy right now so quickly what do you want?

A: Ah right, yes ok sorry. So do you actually sell the bins? And where do you produce them or get them from and is—

T: Listen up Ali, I'll just break it down for you son because it's not rocket science and I've got quite a few things on today. My business right, we've got a thousand bins out at any one time, outside charity shops, schools, prisons, scouts, you name it. So if you wanna pick up some donations or whatever you call us up and we'll sort you out. We are in charge of the whole thing. Ali, I've got a site in Chelmsford right, and there's 50 lads sandblasting the old bins, respraying them a nice new colour and customising it with your logo. We've got at least 200 bins in at any one time OK. Tesco, Co-op, big multinationals. And we're the biggest company in the UK at removing illegal bins right, so we've got contracts out with 38 councils across the country—

A: Illegal bins?

T: Yes Ali, fake ones. From China. Absolute pile of rubbish made of tin and flat packed. So some poor old sod down at the Salvation Army on the high street, he sticks the bin outside and before you know it, it's been nicked right. I picked up 2 bins the other day, totally burned out, the fire brigade called me up and said Terry, can you do something with these and I said to them Ali, is the Pope a Catholic!

A: So you collect fake donation bins, restore them and resell them?

T: Very good, yes, you're getting the hang of this—

A: And then how does it work with the clothing and stuff in the bins?

T: Look Ali, its simple right. A proper bin, not the crap from China but pure steel, that's 700kg, a two man job. £500 for the bin, £100 for delivery. It can't be nicked, it'll last you a lifetime alright. I'll still do you the Chinese bins for £250 but don't call me up crying when it's flown off or whatever. Ali, I'm not gonna lie, it's great to be happy, good looking and a millionaire. Yes, I'm talking about me.

A: Right. So the donated clothing—

T: Yes yes, I'm getting there. You'll get a revenue payment for what we collect, I'll give you 40 pence per kilo right. A load of it is rubbish, the logo stuff, bleached, ruined, that's all going to Africa—

A: Africa?

T: There's no money in over worn clothes is there? Good wearable stuff, that can go on eBay or to the market or whatever. But the rubbish goes to Africa. To be honest Ali, I've got quite a lot on my hands and quite frankly I couldn't give a toss about where it's going. I'm up at 5am every morning, I've got lads going up and down the country and you know what, my wife, she's complaining about it but at the end of the month we're sitting on the terrace with the sun and a massive jug of sangria OK?

A: Yes—

T: Look Ali, as I said I'm driving and I don't really have time for this. All the info's on the website recycledclothingbanks.co.uk so all you need to do is go on there. But my name's Terry and when you know what you want give me a buzz alright?
